

Montana Commission Homes in on Congressional District Maps

ELENA, Mont. (AP) — Montana’s bipartisan redistricting commission has narrowed down the possibilities for congressional maps that would create two U.S. House seats in the state for the first time in 30 years.

Commissioners selected nine maps on Tuesday to move forward as part of the once-a-decade process of redrawing the state's congressional districts, which must be complete before the end of the year.

The commission is made up of two Republican appointees, two Democratic appointees and a nonpartisan chair.

Democrats across the state are hopeful that the new congressional seat will allow them to win representation in the U.S. House despite the fact that all statewide races were won overwhelmingly by Republicans last year.
